CONFERENCE NOW ON THIRD WEEK, OUTCOME OBSCURE

MacDonald Says It Will Be
"Week of Co-Ordination"

NO ELUCIDATION

Over Week-End Press Examines Work of Conference to Date

GEOLOGICAL MUSEUM, LONDON.
England, June 26.—The World Economic Conference entered its third week of existence today with its outcome still obscure in a dense fog.

Prime Minister MacDonald, president of the conference, said it would be a "week of co-ordination," but just what is to be the co-ordination and how it will be accomplished were matters which the conference president failed to elucidate.

Over the week-end the British and continental press critically examined the work of the conference to date, almost unanimously finding it wanting in many important respects. The American delegates continued to be the target of most of the criticism for their unwillingness to stabilize the dollar without which the French doggedly insist agreement on other economic matters is impossible.

This French thesis was confirmed by a cabinet session in Paris which at the same time instructed Finance Minister Bonnet to stick by his guns so France will not be blamed for any break-up of the conference.

Secretary of State Hull's statement Saturday denying any incompatibility between the American domestic and international programs was critically analyzed by the press, most newspapers pronouncing it faulty reasoning.

Wilmington, Del., June 26.—Ten-year-old Hilda Brodsky today was preparing for a trip to New York to identify a suspect held there as the man who kidnapped her on April 15, 1932. The suspect, held by New York police, was identified as Mike "Mush" Cohen, of Philadelphia. Wilmington detectives were sent to New York to question him and a companion, Frank (Salvy) Marino, 38.

WEEK-END ACCIDENTS

Week-end traffic, augmented by thousands seeking to escape steadily rising temperatures, cost the lives of a four-year old girl and a 51 year old man in Pennsylvania, and sent scores to hospitals for treatment, a check-up today by L. N. S. showed.

Mary Dingley, 4, of Duquesne, was fatally injured when she became confused in traffic near her home.

Frederick D. Clark, 51, apparently the victim of a hit-skip motorist, was found dead on the Lincoln Highway near Lancaster.

FOUR BASEBALL GAMES OF WEEK-END INTEREST

Edgely A. C. Goes Down Before Roebing Nine; White Elephants Win

NEWPORT RD. A WINNER

Despite the heavy hitting done by "Eddie" Fields and "Freddie" Hibbs, the Edgely A. C. went down to a 10-6 defeat at the hands of the Roebing Holy Name Society on the Edgely field yesterday.

Fields made two triples and a single to lead the Edgelyites while Hibbs was a close second with a home run and a triple. The rest of the team was weak with the stick.

The visitors also possessed some mean hitters with their clubs. Out of the eight hits made, three were doubles, one a triple, and two four-baggers.

"Pete" Minkema, Edgely's star hurler, was knocked from the hill in the sixth, and replaced by Rudy, who finished in good style.

Next week, Edgely will play the Langhorne Colored Giants, of the Lower Bucks County League.

The White Elephants traveled to Richboro yesterday and defeated the team representing that borough, 15-12.

The Elephants scored all their runs in three big innings. In the second they pushed across nine runs and then with one run behind in the final cant rallied to net four runs and win the game.

The Richboro team fought an uphill battle from the second inning all and several short rallies gave them the lead until the last inning.

"Picture Snatcher" With Jas. Cagney Comes to Grand

James Cagney, the bad boy of the screen, comes to the Grand theatre tonight in his latest Warner Bros. production, "Picture Snatcher," in a thoroughly hard-boiled role, although a delightfully entertaining one.

"Picture Snatcher" is based on a newspaper story by Danny Ahearn, which treats of a little known phase of the work on a yellow tabloid of the most sensational type. Jimmy, the title role, is the go-getter picture man who gets photographs of people and news events by hook or crook, regardless of ethics or common decency.

He is particularly fitted for the job, having served a term in Sing Sing for robbery just before he enters upon his new vocation. He decides to go straight and become the most resourceful and daring picture snatcher on the paper.

Patricia Ellis, a seventeen year old Broadway ingenue, plays opposite Cagney in a picture which marks her first leading role in pictures. She was cast for the part after her notable work as the ingenue in "The King's Vacation," starring George Arliss.

ASK POLICE TO LOCATE INTENDED BRIDEGROOM

Ira Freet Failed to Arrive for His Wedding Here
Saturday

WEDDING IS POSTPONED

EXPLAINS WEDDING
POSTPONEMENT

Miss Giagnacova today speaking through her friend, Mrs. Gilardi, 1805 Farragut avenue, stated that she had received word from Mr. Freet Saturday at 12.30 saying that his parents were in a very bad accident near his home and that he had to leave. The message was sent by messenger, Mrs. Gilardi says. Sunday, further word was received according to Mrs. Gilardi, which stated "no change."

The wedding has been postponed indefinitely.

State police have been asked to locate a young man who failed to arrive for his own wedding here Saturday afternoon. The man sought is Ira Freet, who is said to be a resident near Pittsburgh and was to marry Miss Angeline M. Giagnacova, 310 Brook street.

"No charges have been lodged against the man," said State police, in discussing the case. "There is nothing for which he can be arrested."

Miss Giagnacova says that her husband-to-be was prevented from arriving for the wedding due to the fact that he was called away because of an accident near Pittsburgh, his home town. She is awaiting more definite word from him, she says.

"He was here at one o'clock Saturday morning," stated the distracted girl. "I have not seen him since."

All preparations had been completed for the wedding, which was scheduled to take place Saturday afternoon at two o'clock in the rectory of St. Ann's Church. The ceremony was to have been performed by the Rev. Marcellini Romagnolo, who waited until after six o'clock Saturday night for the couple to arrive. Word was then sent that the bride and bridal party were awaiting the arrival of Freet.

Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Giagnacova, parents of the girl, are frank to admit that they do not understand why Freet has not arrived.

Saturday afternoon the bride-to-be and her sister, Miss Margaret Giagnacova, who was to be bridesmaid, and her brother Albert, who was to be the best man, sat patiently waiting in the living room of the Giagnacova home on Brook street. They were dressed for the wedding and bouquets of flowers had arrived. The flowers were pointed to with sadness and despair yesterday by the members of the family.

The couple had rented a dwelling at 261 Jackson street, which had been furnished and ready for them to establish their home.

Mr. Freet had resided in Edgely for the past three years and was employed at the Paterson Parchment Paper Company.

Miss Giagnacova is confident her lover will arrive as soon as he can. She still loves him and believes the wedding has merely been postponed.

MANY OTHER CRASHES

Minor Accidents Occur in Various Sections During The Week-End

An automobile driven by J. Leslie Kilcoyne rammed the front of the dwelling occupied by William Harbison, 1112 Radcliffe street, early last evening. The entire front of the ground floor of the house was broken and splintered and Mr. Kilcoyne's car was considerably damaged. The porch enclosure was ripped away as well as weather boarding and brick paneling.

Mr. Kilcoyne was cut about the face.

Mrs. Harbison had a narrow escape from being injured in the crash as she had been sitting on a porch swing just before the accident occurred. Mrs. Harbison had just left the swing and gone inside when the crash took place. Today she is suffering from nervous shock.

Mr. Kilcoyne was driving down Radcliffe street when he lost control of his machine. It swerved to the left, passed between two large trees, ploughed over the Harbison lawn and the hood rammed into the house.

Harry C. Durney, 28, of Philadelphia, received lacerations of the face and back when his car swerved off the old Lincoln Highway near Langhorne and struck a pole, snapping it off. He was taken to Northeast Hospital, Philadelphia, by a passing motorist. Corporal Evans, of the Langhorne Highway Patrol, investigated.

Nine cars figured in four crashes in which seven persons were injured between 2 and 4 a. m. today. Two of the crashes were three-car affairs. Three crashes occurred on the Lincoln highway and one on the Bath road. Highway patrolmen were kept busy until the early hours keeping the roads open.

Early yesterday morning a car operated by Harry C. Lawler, of New York City, traveling west on the Lincoln highway near the Speedway, struck the car of Fred F. Sanford, a marine, of Hampton Roads, Va., upsetting it, then crashed into one driven by Morris Gutliener, of New York, upsetting that car also.

Lawler's car was smashed with the two other cars also a total loss. All drivers were treated at the Highway Patrol barracks by Corporals Evans and Diehm for lacerations and shock. Lawler was arrested and fined $27.25 for reckless operation by Magistrate Krause.

WAY TO LIVE

How many of the jobless millions, who two or three years ago gave up the what-seemed-to them hopeless task of looking for work, have learned how to put their leisure to valuable use? How many of those other millions to whom the depression has given a shorter working day and more leisure hours have found uses for those extra free hours?

Will any appreciable number of these men and women be any better prepared for their professions, trades or occupations when they again return to work or to a full day's work than they were when the depression got them? Relatively few. And yet they have had the time and the facilities for a four-years' college course, if they have lived within walking distance of a good library.

It is too bad that there has not fallen into the hands of all these unfortunates or fortunate, whichever one chooses to call them, a little book by Gove Hambidge, who deserted the editor's desk to go for applied leisure in a big way.

Packed into this work "Time to Live," are many little gems for the person with time to live.

The author has discovered that "any reduction in the hours that must be spent in earning a livelihood means so much potential richness added to life."

"The great depression became the acid test of the validity of a certain way of life," he finds in another chapter.

And after he had learned how to find time to live he discovered that there are "certain rich overtones of life that poverty alone is powerless to destroy, once the ear is tuned to catch them, and that enable one to accept hardship with considerable tranquility."

DANGER ON THE AIR

The harm that may be done by "quack" medical programs on the radio is a matter seriously affecting the public. For this reason, it needs to receive the attention of the Federal Radio Commission or other agency with authority to curb the evil. The condition was emphasized by Dr. A. Haines Lippincott, president of the New Jersey State Medical Society, in addressing that body.

"The nauseating material that penetrates our homes," he said, "is an insult to the intelligence of the American people and should be curbed. There should be some act to censor the broadcasting of quack medical programs and the indiscriminate recommendations made for proprietary preparations. This society also might petition the American Medical Association to take some action to meet this challenge to the medical profession."

The danger pointed to by Dr. Lippincott is one to which too little attention has been paid. In the absence of any regulatory action having been taken, the American Medical Association seems the proper agency to make recommendations concerning measures that should be adopted.

How many thousands of dollars persons are led to pay out for useless nostrums because of extravagant claims made for them over the radio, there is not way of knowing. This is the least danger, though. The greater peril lies in the possibility that some of these preparations may prove injurious to the health of those led into buying them.

Echoes of the Past---

By Louise White Watson

Remembered

Anyone who knows Fallsington (and who doesn't?), recalls the "National Hotel" there by the lower Five Points. Going back to the question, "Who doesn't?" one recalls hearing Carrie Christman, then a nurse in China, say, "I hunger for letters from home, from the dear old village of Fallsington, and am happiest when they enclose clippings of the doings thereabouts." Owen Moon, when in Egypt, remembered the little village by sending cards of the place old in history and gracing geography maps ever since one's earliest recollection. William Buckman, another attending school in Fallsington, and who since has traveled the world over, ever kept in touch with his former teachers and other friends by keeping them posted as to his goings in Japan, Australia, and other interesting sections, as did Miss Rachel B. Carver, Mrs. A. M. Leavitt, Mrs. Caroline W. Watson. The old place, wherein their girlhood was spent, went on pleasing journeys with them. One standing at a Philadelphia station, and seeing the word "Fallsington," designating a section of the train, said she felt her pulse add an extra beat. Another, walking in Asbury Park and seeing a cottage named "Fallsington," said she made it a point to inquire if it really were named after "our village," and was informed affirmatively. And right here comes that eternal question, "Breathes there a man with soul so dead Who never to himself has said, 'This is my own, my native land?'"

The Hotel

The sale of the National Hotel, 1921, marks the passing from the pages of local history of one of the county's oldest hotels. This hotel was licensed in 1826, and like Tenneyson's Brook, sang for years, "Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever." And so it seemed. But while the building still stands, yet as a liquor emporium it belongs to the past, thus far. The main building is of stone. The frame addition was built in 1867, the first floor of which was converted into a bar-room.

Proprietors

Some of the earliest proprietors included Benjamin Woolston, James Thompson, W. Clayton, John Nelson, Henry Johnson, William Cook, William Moore, followed later by William Severns, who in turn, was succeeded by his son, John, followed by another son, Edward, and at the latter's death, his widow took control, Mrs. Susan B. Severns. After the death of Mrs. Severns, which occurred November, 1929, the building was sold on January 29, 1931, at public sale, to Dominick Fede, for the sum of $5,650. It is now owned by the K. G. E. and used by them as their place of meeting.

An Early Bar-Room

The old bar-room, before the addition of the frame part of the building, was held in the basement and was reached by stone steps leading down on either side of the passage. It was in marked contrast to the later bar-room for that was generously lighted, while the basement was certainly dark, damp, and dreary. But it sufficed for years in its mission. It also served as a town-hall when one was needed, which was of rare occurrence. But one night the town was agog with excitement. A thief was to be sheltered in the bar-room over night before being taken to Doylestown the next day. Children peered in at the windows but found them most unsatisfactory as all basements necessarily are. One boy coaxed his father to take him down the steps and into the room where the dejected prisoner sat. The boy gazed in amazement and then, with a deep sigh, said, "Well, that is the first real thief I ever saw!" The man gazed for a moment at the little boy and then said, "My little man, let this be your

"You've changed since you went North," Mr. Keyes went on, not unkindly. "I don't know why. Is it a girl?"

Bill didn't answer. "Because if it is, you're taking it all wrong. If she's worth having, take her, take a chance like I did. Work for her. And if it's money she's wanting, if it's the lack of it that's making her hold out, then let her go, boy. She's not worth the thought."

"If that's all you've got to say to me—" Bill burst out hotly. He couldn't bear this talk. He got up and moved toward the door.

"So it is a girl. . . well, think it over. And I'll thank you not to be leading my son out to help you drown your sorrows, young man."

"Rollo's old enough—"

"You're a couple of young fools. Especially you, flaring up at me when I speak for your good. Go back to the oil fields, you were doing fine down there, and you and Rollo only get in each other's way in the business office. Go back in the morning. Now will you do that? And no hard feeling. . . Just begin again, and work hard. Let the old man be proud of you yet. Will you do that?"

Bill took the big hairy hand out stretched to him. "All right, I'll be off in the morning. And—thanks."

It took him a long time to pack. What a chance he had had. . . what a chance. . . in a way it wasn't fair to the old man to quit, and in another way it wasn't fair to stay. It wouldn't be any use going back now, trying to work again. He had never really cared about the work, it was just because it was for Joan, and now that Joan was lost to him. . .

When he woke Rollo to say good-bye some four hours later, he was wearing the old suit he had worn when he came. "What's the idea?" Rollo yawned. "Look like a tramp."

Bill laughed. "I sent young Martin back to Bakersfield." Old Man Keyes said at breakfast. After his talk with Bill he felt better. Rollo might be weak, but he couldn't be altogether a fool, his son and Kate's. . .

"Bet he won't stay long," Rollo grinned. "I notice he only took one suitcase."

"He'd better!" the old man snapped.

"You can't keep off Bill away from the bright lights. He'll be back!"

But Bill never came back. Neither did he ever return to the oil fields. He simply disappeared.

Rollo mourned for a while. Even the old man missed him. They kept his room as he had left it, with all his clothes, his well-tailored, expensive clothes, hanging up in the closet.

In the spring when Mrs. Mallory, the housekeeper, looked them over, she found they were full of moths. She sent them to the Salvation Army.

"Rollo says Willum cleared out one day," he started for Bakersfield after a little tiff he had with the old man, and he simply never arrived. Can you beat that? Left all his clothes behind, and everything. I wrote Rollo not to worry, he'd be back. Shouldn't wonder if he'd turn up here again. You know I was in love with that boy for a while."

"I know," Joan said. "Say, wouldn't it be funny if he came back, and we fell out over him again? I never will forget your face that night I started to introduce him. Fascinating devil. I don't know why especially, that kind of lumberjack way about him. I tell you, Johnnie, if he ever comes back—"

Joan let her talk uninterrupted. It had been a long time since Bill's name had the power to stir her. He was no longer a part of her life. It was as if she had lost a limb, and learned to do without it.

But her sea-green eyes were misty when she answered, "I'm sorry he did that. He might have made something of himself. He'll never come back, Ruth."

"Well, for heaven's sake—how do you know?"

"I don't know—but I'm sure of it."

"Good riddance to bad rubbish!" Maisie said, when Joan told her.

Somehow Joan wanted Maisie to know, Maisie who knew so much already. "Thank goodness, that's over!"

But Maisie didn't entirely put him out of her mind. She believed in ghosts. . .

Bill was gone, and nobody knew where he was.

Ruth consoled herself with a young man from the Dutch East Indies, a young man who wore flat Derby hats, and fawn-colored pants. He spoke with a thick, syrupy accent.

"He helps to pass the time," Ruth said. "It's a cinch I won't marry Rollo until the old man comes through with some cash."

"You would if you loved him," Joan said in the serious, good-little-girl voice that always made Ruth laugh.

"Love! What's that? There's no such thing!" She flung the expensive hat she had been trying on back into its box, and slammed the cover shut.

"She's thinking about Bill," Joan thought, and a queer, jagged pain shot through her.

Ruth kept her from forgetting Bill. When she wasn't talking about him, she was thinking about him. Joan knew she was. Looking out of the window with a pensive look in her bright dark eyes. Looking at Joan, long and speculatively, wondering about her and Bill, wondering how much he had loved her, how much she had loved him.

"He failed us both. . . Ruth, too. . . we're in the same boat, she and I."

He was in Joan's thoughts constantly now. It wasn't that she wanted him back. She would have covered from him the top. Curtis' gift came in a big wicker basket. Silver Princess, a pedigreed Persian cat, the most beautiful Joan had ever seen, but too much the feline aristocrat to be a real comfort.

The New Year's Eve party at the Barstow's was another disappointment. Getting ready for it, shipping into the home-colored robe de style that Francine had given her at Christmas time, standing perfectly still while Maisie crawled around on her knees, making sure the long, full skirt hung just right, and letting cool damp whiffs of jasmine spray into her hair from Maisie's put glass atomizer, was the best part.

There were too many people at the party. Too many mimical, laughing girls. Too many amorous, bored looking young men who were tired of dancing and wanted to take her down town for "some real stuff."

"Come on—we'll never be missed!"

"Curtis is the only one I cared anything about and I hardly saw him," she confided to Maisie afterwards. "Of course, he was the host, but Mrs. Barstow never let him come within a mile of me—"

"So that's it. Well I'll fix you, you old crow!" Maisie said to herself. "Pretending to rush Joan, asking her to all those social functions, and then treating her like that!"

She decided on a little dinner party of her own. "Yes, and there won't be anyone there but him and Johnnie."

She planned the menu first, every bit of it, from the tomato soup with whipped cream to the cafe noir and after-dinner mints, before she invited Curtis by telephone.

"Is this Mr. Barstow? I was just wondering. . . this is Miss Kimmer, Maisie Kimmer, Joan calls me Maisie, everybody does. . . I was just wondering if some night you wanted to come out to my place for dinner? Oh, that'll be fine. . . no, not tonight, that is I wasn't thinking of tonight. . . could you come next Thursday?"

So much to do! There was all the best silver to clean, and then there was the matter of Suma, the little Japanese woman who came to scrub on Wednesdays. Suma knew how to wait on the table, but she didn't understand about the cap and apron Maisie bought for her to wear. In the end Maisie had to pin it on the girl's sleek hair herself and hoped it wouldn't slide off. . . it certainly would if she didn't stop shaking her head that way like a restless horse. . . mercy, did she want it to fall off?

But the table was a miracle of lace tablecloth, hand-painted china, and cut glass. She knew that was all right, and Suma got through the seven courses without forgetting anything, not even the finger-bowls.

So the dinner was a great success. Maisie knew Curtis had enjoyed it and when it was over she got up and said, "Now I'll just step over to—"

And before the words were out of her mouth Joan was shaking her head and raising her eyebrows, signaling her not to say it, but she kept right on anyway. She hadn't given this dinner for nothing. "I'll just step over to Miss Harvey's, cause you young folks'll want a little time to yourselves—"

She looked so much like a middle-aged and over-dressed cupid as she creaked out of the room, closing the door carefully behind her, that Joan couldn't help it, she lay back in her chair and shook with helpless, betraying laughter.

But Curtis didn't laugh. He stood with his back to Joan, turning the leaves of an old magazine.

His hands were trembling.

When Maisie came home at half past ten, Curtis had gone. "Why—what happened—what did he go so soon for?"

Joan looked up from her book with a rather watery smile. "It isn't so early, is it?"

"For a young man in love with a girl it certainly is. You're keeping something from me, Johnnie, and I don't think it's fair—after I try—"

"I know, Maisie. I know. I'm a miserable, ungrateful thing, only I'm not really—I do love you, Maisie. But you see I—I don't want Curtis to—love me—"

"What?"

Joan began to laugh, helplessly. "Maisie—if you could see your face! It's so funny—"

ed the close of the first gathering, the sleepy old village was startled by hearing the clamorous and continued ringing of a large hand-bell, a dinner-bell of goodly proportions. It was the custom in those days for the home meeting to provide dinner for the visiting Friends at their different homes. After their first astonishment had subsided at this unusual noise, they waited for no explanation but guided their prancing steeds in the direction of the hospitality awaiting them. The bewildered landlord, seeing their departure, far from the realms of his princely board, sought information as to the exodus, and when informed that a joke had been perpetrated and he the victim, he exclaimed, "A joke is a joke but this one is somewhat a drain on my pocket-book, but if I can't feed one set of Friends, I surely can put my appetites to the test. Come on in, boys, everything's ready." Mr. Mitchell's stay as proprietor of the National Hotel was short.

Accordingly, Mr. Mitchell made extensive preparations for the day by having a big dinner prepared, one that would serve the incoming guests. Carriages rushed by, on up the hill, unloaded their passengers and all certainly looked promising to the waiting landlord. He had been told of an intermission between the meeting for service and the business meeting, so when the outgoing Friends announced

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., June 25.—Lazarely production methods are no more. Cecil B. De Mille, who used to take months in preparation for a story, will start shooting "Four Frightened People" within five weeks. Before he sailed on a brief yachting trip, the director fixed upon two important members of his cast. They will be Claudette Colbert, who recently worked for him in "The Sign of the Cross," and Mary Boland.

This leaves only two principals to be cast—both men.

In "Four Frightened People" De Mille has a story slightly reminiscent of his old success, "Male and Female." Both deal with a group of city-dwellers, suddenly thrown upon their resources amidst primitive surroundings. Only there is no "Admirable Creighton" to inject the element of class distinction into the new story.

"Four Frightened People" was written by E. Arnot Robertson, whose earlier novel, "Three Came Unarmed," is scheduled for production at R-K-O.

Tinkling bells, and the clink of silver

IN A Chinese fairy story one reads about the Emperor's garden, where rare and colorful plants from all over the world were constantly flowering.

It was the duty of the honorable head gardener to watch for the most beautiful of the blooms and tie to the stem of each a little silver bell. As the flowers swayed in the breeze, the bells tinkled with sweet music. Thus the courtiers and the distinguished visitors strolling along the paths, were sure to see the finest specimens.

This was the Emperor's way of saying "I have something extra fine that you should see: look this way and you'll be repaid."

In the advertising columns of this paper are similar messages addressed to YOU. Read them and you will hear the clink of silver. Our merchants are saying "We have some extra values. We have some especially seasonable articles that you should see. Come to our stores and you will be repaid."

You have nothing to lose when you accept this invitation. In fact, when you fail to do so, you're missing some of the very news for which you bought this paper!

SUNDAY DINNER SUGGESTIONS

By ANN PAGE

SUMMER Sundays are play days for wage earners. Why should not the housekeeper have a restful and pleasant day also, even though hers is a seven day job? If her family will co-operate, she can plan and serve meals which require a minimum of time to be spent in the kitchen.

Food stores are helping the housewife in this matter and are offering foods which can be easily and quickly prepared on Sunday or prepared on Saturday for Sunday use. Why not spare yourself during the hot months? The low cost and medium cost dinners suggested by the Quaker Maid Kitchen can be prepared with little trouble.

Fresh foods which will prove tempting this week-end are watermelon and cantaloupe, new cabbage, spinach, green peas and lettuce. Ingredients for salad making and dressing should not be forgotten by the week-end shopper.

OUR DAILY FOOD

THE GELATIN DESSERT

Quickening and cool, its fiery heart in vibrant colors opens the fruits. Those living foods—

WHEN it comes to menu making, desserts offer a real problem to the housewife, especially in summer. Hot and heavy puddings have no appeal, and fresh fruits alone are not always satisfying to the family sweet tooth. Of all summer dishes the gelatin dessert has most to offer. It is fresh and cooling; it appeals to the eye and to the palate; it is simple to prepare; inexpensive; and the variety is almost inexhaustible. At least there would be no difficulty in serving a different gelatin dessert every day in the month, according to one accomplished housewife.

The prepared gelatin desserts are obtainable in at least six flavors and each of these may be served plain, whipped, combined with beaten white of egg or whipped cream. Fruits of all kinds in any quantity may be added to the plain gelatin or served with it. Some fruits, of course, combine better with certain flavors than with others. The same housewife suggests that variety may also be obtained by the use of different molds, large and individual, fancy, ring, or the Mary Ann type. Gelatins are often served on sponge cake or in pie shells. The jellied fruit salad is still another form of service. Ring and Mary Ann molds are especially well adapted for serving jellies with added fruit, whipped cream or marshmallow sauce.

Unsweetened and unflavored gelatin is useful for certain other desserts such as coffee jelly, fluff, whip or Bavarian and for Spanish Cream, vanilla, coffee, caramel, or chocolate flavor. (Spanish Cream is a jellied soft custard into which the beaten whites of two eggs have been folded.)

"The accomplished housewife" contributes the following:

To make a prepared gelatin, pour one pint of boiling water over the contents of the package and stir until entirely dissolved. Cool and then chill until congealed.

Gelatin Fluff is made by beating partially congealed plain jelly to a foam and then chilling it until firm. Gelatin Whip is prepared by adding one stiffly beaten white of egg to partially congealed plain jelly.

A Bavarian is a plain jelly into which, when partially congealed, one half cup of heavy cream beaten until stiff, has been whipped.

One level tablespoon of plain gelatin, softened in one-quarter cup of cold liquid, water, coffee or milk, will stiffen one pint of hot coffee, cocoa or soft custard.

ANNOUNCE FOUR DIAMOND CLASHES FOR THIS SECTION

Tonight on St. Ann's field, the opening game of the second half of the Bristol Twilight League will be played. The Edgely A. C. and the Independents will clash. Both of these clubs have revamped line-ups and a close fray is expected.

Edgely has almost a new outfit to show to the Bristol fans, while Manager Rubino, of the Indies, has made several changes which he thinks will benefit his nine. He has acquired several players of the Bristol High School team and will start them tonight.

On the White Elephants' field, on Bath Road, the Elephants and the Cubans will clash for the first half championship of the Bristol Suburban League. The Cubans are in first place with ten wins and three losses, while the Elephants have captured ten trys and lost four.

A win for the Elephants will place them in a one-half game lead and will allow the colored team to have a play-off with the Furmans, which if it results in a Furman win will end the first half.

The baseball fans of Bristol and vicinity will be treated to some flashy baseball playing on Wednesday night when the Hulmeville team, of the Lower Bucks County League plays the Baltimore Black Sox, of the National Colored League.

The Black Sox recently defeated Hightstown of the Central Jersey League, and a win for the Hulmeville team will raise the prestige of the Lower Bucks circuit.

This fray will start at six o'clock, sharp.

Tomorrow night on the Newport diamond, the Newportville Road M. C. will play the final tilt of the Bristol Suburban League first half. Furman will furnish the opposition.

EMILIE A. A. REGISTERS SIXTH STRAIGHT WIN

Climaxed with a three run rally in the last inning, the Emilie A. A. baseball nine registered its sixth straight victory on the Emilie field yesterday afternoon, nosing out the strong Towanda A. C., of Philadelphia. Final score was 6-5.

Going into the last frame, the visitors were leading 5-3 and it looked as if the Emilie streak would be broken. Harrison, first batter up, flied out. With two strikes on Schoenfeld Kie-well let loose a wild pitch that struck the local batsman. Things brightened up when Rockhill lashed the first ball pitched for a line single to center. Leigh's best was a short fly to right which Cashman came in fast to make a shoestring catch. The runners advanced on the catch. Watson aided his own cause with a double to left center which scored both Rockhill and Harrison and deadlocked the count. Comly picked out a nice one and delivered the winning hit which scored Watson.

"Ike" Watson hurled for the Goose-towners and gave the Towanda team but five hits. However, these hits were bunched in the first and fifth innings to score all of the invaders' tallies.

The visitors jumped into the lead in the first when Pearlman singled, and was sacrificed to second. O'Hara singled and Holt fanned. Rush followed with a hard hit to right which scored both base-runners.

The Emilieites tied it in the second. Comly was hit with a pitched ball. Hits were then made by Still, Bruce, and Hibbs, which scored a duo of tallies.

Two hits, a base on balls, and two errors gave the Towanda team two more tallies in the fifth, giving them a 5-2 lead. Emilie picked up a run in their half of the frame on Schoenfeld's double and Leigh's single.

Leon Comly led the hitters for the winners with three hits in three times to the plate.

Tullytown A. C. gained another victory yesterday afternoon when they took the Fallsington boys over by the score of 11-8. Fallsington, leading its league ball took over several men from local high schools but did not seem to make any impression on the Tullytown nine.

Monti, first baseman for Tullytown, thrilled the fans in the first of the sixth by hitting the ball for a complete circuit of the bases. Out of four times at bat he obtained a single, double, a homer and a walk. Lineberry pitched for the first six innings, when Sullivan relieved him, each striking out five men. All Cigarettes are not Alike

Different Kinds of Tobaccos Make a Difference in Taste and Aroma

... Take Chesterfields, for Instance

SOME cigarettes are made out of only one kind of tobacco ... while others are made from several different kinds.

And everyone can understand that different tobaccos make a difference in taste and aroma. Chesterfields are a good example of this difference.

You see it's not easy to make Chesterfield's milder taste. It takes three distinct kinds of Domestic tobaccos. Then these must be seasoned with the right amount of Turkish. And they must be blended and cross-blended until their flavors are welded together ... to make a cigarette that has character and yet is not too strong ... to make a cigarette that's milder, a cigarette that tastes better.

Choice Turkish Tobaccos come to Chesterfield warehouses in bales like these.
